ARCHITECTURAL / PROPERTY DESCRIPTION

(Include expanded description of the building/property, setting, significant landscape features, outbuildings, and alterations)

Architectural Description: The Bump House is a simple, yet unusual, example of a stucco-clad dwelling which utilizes Italian Renaissance details. This one-story home is composed in a complex plan of square projections, built upon a concrete foundation above a basement. Its flat roof is hidden by an unadorned parapet, which is topped by a simple coping. Two chimneys, clad in stucco, exist on the exterior of the north elevation: another chimney is on the roof. The west-oriented facade is an asymmetrical composition, with a central entry, a vertical element adjacent to the south, and a three part bay to the north. The porch features an Italian Renaissance arch, which is supported by two Ionic columns on stucco piers. The vertical element is actually an extension of the parapet; and is ornamented by a rectangular relief painted in a contrasting color. A stucco balustrade wraps around the southwest corner embellished by the same rectangular relief. A side recess on the south elevation has a small shed roof covered by tile shingles. Fenestrations are simple one-over-one sash sidelights.

HISTORY

(Chronological, descriptive history of the property from its construction through at least the historic period [preferably to the present])

Historical Significance: This unique, stucco-clad residence was constructed in 1925 for long-time Hillsboro attorney, Mark Bailey Bump. Mr. Bump's brother, Daniel D. Bump, built a similar one in Forest Grove at about the same time. Mark Bump practiced law in Hillsboro for over fifty years. Born in Benton County, at King's Valley near Monmouth, on December 18, 1872, Mark first studied art, literature, and languages at Oregon State College in Corvallis. After completing his degree, he studied law with Judge John Kelsey and was admitted to the Bar in 1898. During these years of study Mark supported himself by teaching school and farming. In 1900 he settled in Hillsboro and set up a practice across from the Washington County Courthouse on Main Street. Bertha O. Souther and Mark were married in 1906 and had three daughters. He and his family lived in an older home located at this corner, but it was later moved to the back of the property to make way for their new house in 1925. Mark and Bertha resided in the house until Mark's death in 1951. His wife then chose to move from the family home and constructed a smaller dwelling in Hillsboro.
